

Teach Your Child The Skills To Take Leadership Of Their Life

Connect With and Encourage Your Child to Achieve Their Goals Through The Newly Released Fable – The Boy who Climbed the Mountain

Ever wondered how to get involved in your children's life and make a real difference to their development?

Today's ever changing world is creating feelings of disempowerment and disconnect not only in adults but in children also. In our society children need, more than ever, to learn the tools to navigate their growth and take leadership of their lives and goals. Children have just as many goals and aspirations as adults but are not necessarily aware of how to achieve them.

International Leadership and Personal Development coach, Steve Morris, has created an imaginative and enlightening fable titled The Boy who Climbed the Mountain which illustrates the natural cycle of growth in life. It is intended as a tool to foster personal growth, decision-making, cross cultural differences and family values in children and is based upon his philosophy of Glorious Living!. There is a special note to adult readers in the beginning explaining how to use the book to encourage these outcomes in your children.

"This book will allow you to foster stronger bonds with your child, sharing both the hopes and aspirations of your child as well as your own. It is imperative that children learn how to take control of their lives early so as to avoid feelings of discontent later in life. You can help equip your child for professional and personal success and happiness later in life", says Author Steve Morris.

The story revolves around a poor Nepalese farmer's son who embarks on a journey to follow his dream of climbing a far off mountain. With over 40 full-size original illustrations by Nepalese artist Prithri Shrestha, 'The Boy who Climbed the Mountain' is written in both English and Nepalese script to capture the authenticity of the culture and exotic lands of the Himalayas and her people. The Boy who Climbed the Mountain can be read to and understood by children of all ages and is a self-reader for ages 8 and up.

The Boy who Climbed the Mountain was released in 2005 and can be purchased for a retail price of USD$19.95(Hardcover) on www.amazon.com
Also available is a Coloring Book priced at USD$3.95
